Tips on What to Look for in a Continuing Care Retirement Community

Various expert sources agree that when looking for a Continuing Care Retirement Community (CCRC) for yourself or a loved one, there are several key factors that you should consider:

- Services and Amenities – Ask what types of services are offered at the CCRC, as well as which ones are included at no cost versus for an additional fee. Do the available services support worry-free living and enhance your daily lifestyle? Are resort-style amenities available within the community?
- Social Activities – An active and engaged social life is considered very important for continued physical and emotional health and well-being. Does the community provide cultural, educational, recreational, social events and activities – both on-site and off-site?
- Wellness Features – Regular exercise and wellness activities are also viewed by experts as crucial to maintaining mind and body health. Does the community offer state-of-the-art fitness facilities, the assistance of personal trainers, spa treatments and regularly scheduled wellness activities?
- Dining – An exceptional dining experience that also meets your health and nutrition needs is something you deserve in your well-earned retirement. Does the community offer both fine dining and casual dining options on the premises?
- Quality Healthcare Services – Does the community offer on-site medical care such as a primary care clinic and physician's office? Does the community have a full-time medical director? In the event your health needs change is there on-site nursing care, home health care or other supportive health services?
- Location – As they say, "Location, location, location!" Be sure the CCRC is in a community that meets your unique needs and preferences and offers the type of setting and lifestyle you enjoy – whether it's enjoying nature, walking, shopping or going out on the town.
- Resident Satisfaction – Do those living there appear to be happy and enjoying life? Leading CCRCs provide an environment where the residents live an engaged lifestyle, featuring wellness, learning, leisure activities and a variety of social options.
- Financial Considerations – Be sure you understand the financial terms of your CCRC agreement. CCRCs typically require that incoming residents sign a contractual agreement. This agreement will secure the individual's living accommodations and services – often times inclusive of healthcare services over the long term. Normally, a monthly service fee is charged for routine upkeep and maintenance of the community's services and facilities.

- Accreditation – Last but certainly not least, when you begin searching for a Continuing Care Retirement Community the importance of accreditation is significant. Accreditation demonstrates a CCRC’s commitment to continuously improve service quality, encourage feedback and to focus on the satisfaction of the residents served. For example, Williamsburg Landing is the first and only CARF-CCAC accredited Continuing Care Retirement Community in the Hampton Roads area of Virginia and among only 15 percent of accredited CCRCs in the country.
